Title: Converting Moongates to Thine Own Use

Author: Erethian

Mongates come in four known varieties: blue, a gate across a land, red, a gate connecting worlds, black, a gate that traverses dimensions, and the theoretical silver, a time gate. These gates, to a lesser or greater degree, owe their power to the force exerted by large bodies of matter, moving through the space around us. Therefore, I postulate that if one can know what forces are being exerted, one can manipulate the destination of any given moongate by changing these forces...

The book goes on to describe certain methods of manipulation, and save for the prohibitively large amounts of power required to effect even the weakest of monngates, the logic seems sound.
